Books:

Taylor-Robinson, Michelle M. and Nehemia Geva (eds.). 2023. The Image of Gender and Political Leadership: A multinational view of women and leadership. New York: Oxford University Press.

This is the first multi-country, factorial experiment on candidate gender designed to avoid social desirability bias and provide a real-world measure of the importance of gender via direct quantitative contrasts with party effect size. The 8 countries: Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, England, Israel, Sweden, Uruguay, and the U.S., are established presidential and parliamentary democracies that jointly offer variance on incorporation of women in government, policy agenda, electoral rules, and party system. Young adult participants come from highly diverse socioeconomic backgrounds in all cases. Political science and psychology literatures are the basis of a multi-dimensional framework about how context molds mental templates of leadership. The 2x2x2 experimental factors, treatments (a lengthy candidate speech with partisan jargon and buzz words), field implementation, and ANOVA techniques used for analysis are outlined in detail. Country experts who implemented the experiment interpret findings against key country-specific historic and current events in separate country chapters, followed by a chapter providing a meta-analysis of all hypotheses across cases. Though many broad and case specific conclusions can be drawn, the main finding is that traditional leadership images (leaders are men) appear only where defense dominates the political agenda. Otherwise, in diverse contexts, women candidates are accepted as leaders by the participants, indicating young adults' approval of women's ability to hold diverse posts, win votes, and manage stereotypically masculine policy areas.

Escobar-Lemmon, Maria and Michelle M. Taylor-Robinson. 2016. Women in Presidential Cabinets: Power Players or Abundant Tokens? New York: Oxford University Press.

We compare the backgrounds of the women and men appointed to cabinets in 5 presidential democracies, and the treatment/effectiveness of women compared to men, to assess whether the evidence indicates that gender integration is occurring at this highest level of the executive branch of government, or if women appear to still be tokens, albeit more numerous tokens.

Escobar-Lemmon, Maria and Michelle M. Taylor-Robinson (eds.). 2014. Representation: The Case of Women. New York: Oxford University Press.

This book explores how representation is achieved, or not, examining both descriptive and substantive forms of representation, paying particular attention to the meaning and measurement of women's interests. (Introduction and Conclusion chapters authored by Escobar-Lemmon and Taylor-Robinson, one empirical chapter authored by Escobar-Lemmon, Schwindt-Bayer and Taylor-Robinson, three theory chapters and six additional theory chapters by invited authors.)

Taylor-Robinson, Michelle M. 2010. Do the Poor Count? Democratic Institutions and Accountability in a Context of Poverty. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press.

The work explores when elected officials have an incentive to represent poor constituents, focusing on electoral and nominating institutions and clientelism and the capacity of poor people to monitor and sanction officials. An extended study of Honduras explains roles adopted by Honduran legislators. I employ case studies of conditional cash transfer programs in Brazil and Honduras to explore policy implications of legislators' incentives. I conclude that representation of poor people is most likely to take the form of clientelistic representation.

Casper, Gretchen and Michelle M. Taylor. 1996. Negotiating Democracy: Transitions From Authoritarian Rule. 1996. Pittsburgh, PA: University of Pittsburgh Press.

Why do some countries succeed in replacing an authoritarian regime with a democratic one, while others fail? For those countries that succeed in installing democracy, we explain why some make progress toward consolidating and others do not. The project draws on game theory to point out the effect of preferences, information, and strategy on the outcome of the transition process, and presents in-depth evidence from twenty-four cases, selected from Africa, Asia, Latin America, and East-Central and Southern Europe.
